(Please see the notes below: we prefer that papers submitted to the Editors are provided both in hard copy and as PDF files; large files, however, should not be sent as e-mail attachments.)

SUBMISSIONS CRITERIA

The Journal is intended as a forum for historians specialising in different areas of research. Prospective contributors are strongly urged to look through back issues to consider whether the Journal would be an appropriate place in which to publish their work.

Submissions should focus on new research. They may be sent to the Editors at any time throughout the year and should be of the following kinds:

- Articles of up to 15,000 words (the word-count to include footnotes)
- shorter Notes of a miscellaneous character
- editions or transcripts of previously unpublished texts and documents (these are normally published as appendices to Articles or Notes)

Please note:

—Submissions must be original and not previously published or due to be published elsewhere, whether in greater or lesser detail or in the same or another language.

—The Journal does not solicit contributions, nor can the Editors consider proposals for articles or unfinished drafts.

—Similarly, the Editors cannot accept submissions which require extensive editorial input such as further research or rewriting, or creative input such as the production of print-quality diagrams.

—Submissions should be in English. Quotations in other languages should normally be translated or summarised in the text, with a footnote giving the original in full. (See our Style Sheet.)

—All texts should be sent both as printouts on paper (printed on one side of the paper only) and as PDF files. The text and footnotes should be presented in double spacing. Each page should be numbered and should bear a key word of the title. We also require both printed and PDF copies of all the illustrations, together with their numbered captions. Small PDF files may be sent by e-mail to jwci@sas.ac.uk, but files which contain images are often too large to be sent as e-mail attachments: these should be provided on a disk or memory stick, or sent using an internet-based file transfer facility.

—For subsequent return of a printout please send postage stamps or international postage reply coupons. It is always assumed, however, that authors have retained an appropriate copy of their work.

—Texts which are accepted for publication will eventually be needed as Microsoft Word files. We can convert from other word-processing packages but authors are urged not to compose articles in WordPerfect: files converted from this format are always problematic.

CONDITIONS OF PUBLICATION

Submissions which are accepted for publication should be put into the Journal's house style and supplied in electronic format.

Where required, it is the author's responsibility to provide suitable illustrations for publication (see below), to obtain permission to reproduce them and, if necessary, to pay any copyright fees. The captions for all illustrations should include the provenance of the original object, together with elements specified in letters of permission from photographers, copyright holders, etc., although the Journal reserves the right to edit these elements to conform to its style.

Acceptance of a contribution for publication in the Journal implies formal transfer of copyright including electronic rights in that contribution to the Warburg Institute for publication in the Journal or any reprint thereof. The Editors will, however, normally grant permission to an author, author's agent or executors for a contribution to be reprinted elsewhere after its appearance in the Journal.

Authors are not paid but are allocated access to the online edition of the Journal (ISSN 2044-0014) hosted by IngentaConnect™ for the volume in which their contribution is included, from which PDF copies can be downloaded without charge.

Authors of Articles but not of Notes will receive a complimentary copy of the volume. All authors are entitled to purchase at a reduced rate copies of the issue of the Journal in which their work appears.

All authors currently receive 12 bound offprints each free of charge, and may order an additional quantity at their own expense, provided an order can be placed with our printers in good time; any offprints promised in return for favours granted or in lieu of copyright fees must come out of the author's own allowance. Please note, however, that the bound offprint allowance may be reduced or discontinued in future. This issue is currently under review.

Note on Open Access:

The Journal's policy on Open Access Self-Archiving of articles accepted for publication can be found separately on the Journal website. This policy was drawn up in order to facilitate compliance with the Research Councils UK (RCUK) Policy on Open Access, having implications for research papers submitted from April 2013 onwards and which acknowledge funding from one or more of the UK's Research Councils.

NOTES ON SUPPLYING ILLUSTRATIONS FOR PUBLICATION

Once an Article or Note has been accepted for publication in the Journal, professionally produced images are essential. It must be stressed that digital cameras, image-manipulation software and scanners cannot guarantee high quality images for lithographic printing: however great their range of functions and options, it is no substitute for the knowledge, optical judgement and experience of a professional photographer. Similarly, drawings and diagrams must be professionally produced, reflecting the function of all images in the Journal as integral parts of the argument.

Images with tonal variety:

This category describes the majority of Journal illustrations. We require clear, critically sharp, well-lit photographs with detail from shadow to highlight, made directly from the work to be reproduced.

— Where images have to be obtained from archives or libraries it is advisable to order them in good time, as there is sometimes a long waiting list, particularly over the summer.

— The file size for an acceptable digital image is normally at least 1 megabyte, rising to much, much larger for complex colour images which show, e.g., paintings, fine drawings, folios from illuminated manuscripts, or texts with marginal and interlinear annotations.

— Some image archives may specify pixels measurements: a width of around 2000 pixels is the most suitable for a full-page reproduction.

— We are able to include a limited number of colour images in each volume. Due to financial constraints, we are obliged to limit this facility to papers for which colour reproductions are likely to enhance comprehension of the subject matter.

— Photographic prints should be clearly marked with their Figure numbers on the reverse, using a soft pencil: do not type or write heavily as the marks may show through when the print is subjected to bright light, prior to printing.

Images where the original object cannot be photographed:

Very occasionally, it may be necessary to scan a printed reproduction from a published book. In such cases, authors are asked to contact the Journal's Photographic Editor, who will normally scan the image directly from a book in the Warburg Institute Library, thus ensuring that the digital file will be of the quality we require.

— If better copy for any illustration exists in a book or manuscript not available to the contributor, this should be noted in a full bibliographical reference.

Line drawings done by hand, and diagrams produced using specialised software:

— Line art which was generated digitally should normally be supplied as a large, high-resolution digital file. The dimensions should correspond with the diagram's anticipated publication size (a past copy of the Journal will serve as a guide). Please note that desktop printers are unreliable for proofing fine lines, because they usually have a minimum dot dimension (and therefore a minimum line width, which can be misleading).

— In the case of ink drawings, we prefer to work from the original, or a clear photograph of it printed on gloss finish paper, rather than a photocopy.

Post-publication considerations:

All photographic prints will be returned after the Journal has been published. Authors who will have no further need of them, however, may like to consider donating their photographs to either the Warburg or the Courtauld Institute, both of which have extensive photographic archives.

Copyright:

When requesting permission to reproduce images, it is worth stressing that the Journal is a purely academic, scholarly periodical and that authors are not paid for their contributions. Some copyright holders may reduce or waive their usual fee in this circumstance; but it may be necessary to request specifically that they will do so. Note too that archives or museums which supply photographs will normally ask for a printed offprint when the article is published (but some, such as the British Library, already receive copies of each volume).

— The following information may be required by copyright holders: ISSN 0075-4390, online ISSN 2044-0014; print run 1500; the Journal is published in English only, but has subscribers worldwide.

— When, exceptionally, an image has been scanned from a published book, it remains the contributor's responsibility to negotiate reproduction permission with the owner of the copyright for that image.

— Please note that when illustrations or diagrams are to be published by the author as Open Access, additional copyright clearance and associated payments may be required.
